Cardinal Sighting in Godfrey

Alexis Volner

If anyone had driven by the Godfrey Khoury League fields on September 30th or October 7th at around 2:00 p.m. they would have seen quite a sight – Fredbird®! Yes, the loveable St. Louis mascot spent those Sunday afternoons helping out with the Bluff City SOX Baseball Clinic.

The clinic was free for boys and girls ages 6 to 12. Children were invited to come learn essential baseball skills from the SOX players. They spent the day doing drills and playing ball. That was until Fredbird® disrupted all productivity.

Fredbird® caused a commotion when he charged onto the field and began an impromptu game. Each child got to slug a pitch from the Cardinals Face-man (or bird in this case). After everyone had gotten to play, Fredbird® posed for pictures, and signed autographs.

Once the bird flew off, the clinic resumed and a great time was had by all. The day concluded with awards for participation, free sodas, and a special gift that Fredbird® had left behind for his fans. Overall, the clinic was a huge success with more than 50 participants.

The Bluff City Athletic Club, NFP is a not for profit organization dedicated to youth sports. They will field two baseball teams for the 2008 season and plan to expand to other sports in the coming years.
